

The security guards at the facility hadn't received the right paperwork when the tractor trailer pulled up. So they turned the truck away.

Now, at that time, we were in such short supply of PPE, and our healthcare practitioners were risking their lives because of that shortage. So this was incredibly important that we get these supplies delivered.

Doctors and nurses and other first responders on the frontlines of the pandemic were counting on that delivery of supplies that was now headed in the wrong direction. So Elvia jumped into action. She started calling folks at HHS and other Federal and State agencies. She woke people up. She tracked down cell phone numbers, including the numbers of the guards who were on duty. Eventually, she got that truck turned around and those supplies were delivered.

She was able to do this because she had worked for months and months to build connections and relationships with folks working, at every level, on responding to the pandemic. Thus, when an incident like this occurred, she knew how to make sure the bureaucratic redtape didn't stop people from getting the help and resources they needed.

And so it was when our previous legislative director left to go to the State Department in January of 2021, it was clear that Elvia's tenacity, resourcefulness, humor, warmth, professionalism would make her the perfect choice to ably step up and fill that role.

Almost overnight, she went from focusing exclusively on healthcare and education to overseeing the entire pantheon of our team's legislative activities, with all of the added responsibilities—like staffing vote-aramas—that came along with the role.

As legislative director, she has personally taken point on our efforts to protect American democracy and ensure every American's right to vote. She quickly and deeply immersed herself in the intricacies of the issues of voter suppression, of dark money, and gerrymandering that we sought to address in the For the People Act and its derivative, the Freedom to Vote Act.

On top of that, Elvia got familiar with the history and arcane procedures of this body that are so much in need of reform today, helping to craft workable options to restore the Senate to being a better legislative body that our Founders intended it to be.

And even now, she has continued to take the lead on my "Mysteries of the Senate" project, where every week we prepare a memo for the caucus explaining another aspect of the Senate's arcane history and procedures. This is valuable, I hope, because I believe we cannot begin to improve the way we function unless Members understand better the Senate's history and the web of rules and precedents that guide how we operate.

It would be an understatement to say that Elvia has excelled at every task and every issue she has taken on over these last 5 years. It has been a pleasure for me to work with her. It has been a pleasure for the entire team to work with her. And she has contributed greatly to the future of our team nurturing and bringing along new staffers, making sure they not only are up to speed on the issues but fully integrated participants in our collective effort to improve policies to benefit Oregonians and to benefit Americans.

Elvia, all of us on the team—all of us on team Merkley—thank you deeply for your dedication. We wish you all the best in your next chapter as you take your talents back home to Oregon. I think all of us are a bit jealous of that opportunity to be fully back home. And we know that wherever you are, you will never stop fighting to build a better world.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority whip.

MASS SHOOTINGS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, today is Valentine's Day and a day we set aside to celebrate love, but far too many American families this day have haunting memories and unfathomable pain. They are the families of Americans killed by gun violence.

Last night, the families of three Michigan State University students joined the heartbroken ranks. Five additional victims were wounded. It was the 67th mass shooting in the United States of America in this calendar year. February 14, the 67th mass shooting—more than 1 mass shooting every day this year. What is a mass shooting? When four people or more are injured or killed.

No other nation on Earth accepts this wholesale slaughter that we have now become so inured to in the United States. We shouldn't be. Americans have seen too much carnage from guns. I am sick of it. This Nation is sick of it.

Five years ago today, a 19-year-old gunman murdered 17 people and wounded 17 more at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, FL—the fifth anniversary of it, and we are observing the madness and slaughter that took place in Michigan. The gunman fired indiscriminately at Parkland, at students and teachers, and used a Smith & Wesson AR-15 assault rifle. The dead included 14 students and 3 staff members who died trying to protect them.

The Parkland shooting horrified our Nation. It cut especially deep at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb, IL, 65 miles outside of Chicago. You see, exactly 10 years ago on Valentine's Day 2008, a gunman armed with a shotgun and three semiautomatic pistols kicked open the door of an auditorium-style classroom at Northern Illinois and walked up and down the aisle, shooting people indiscriminately. The shooting lasted just under 6 minutes. When it ended, 5 students had died at Northern and more than 20 were injured.

Six weeks into the year 2023, and already this year, at least 5,127 Americans have died from gun violence according to the Gun Violence Archive. They died in homicides, suicides, and accidental shootings.

Last year, Congress passed and President Biden signed the most sweeping gun safety law in 30 years—the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act. Among other things, it toughened background checks for gun purchasers under the age of 21 and cracked down on the trafficking and straw purchasing of firearms. It also included funding to help States implement red flag laws to keep guns out of the hands of people who pose a danger to themselves or others. Just today, my home State of Illinois was awarded $9½ million in funding under the new law to help carry out Illinois' red flag law. That is progress. But the majority of Americans support even stronger gun safety laws, including closing the gaps in the background check system for gun purchases.

I believe that Congress should also restore the ban on assault weapons, including AR-15-style rifles—increasingly the weapon of choice for mass shooters. These military-style weapons have no place in schools, neighborhoods, or college campuses.

One month after the Parkland school massacre, student survivors of that slaughter organized a rally called March for Our Lives. Hundreds of thousands of people attended the march in Washington. One of those powerful speakers that day was a young woman named Emma Gonzalez, a survivor of Parkland. She warned Americans that day, "Fight for your lives before it's someone else's job."

In America today, gun violence can strike any family, anywhere, anytime. Today on this grim anniversary, we must recommit ourselves to a better America, to do more to protect our kids, our schools, our communities, and our country from the scourge of gun violence.

CORPORATE BANKRUPTCY

Mr. President, last month, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals rejected an attempt by the venerable corporation Johnson & Johnson, which sought to make a mockery of our system of justice and bankruptcy laws. In this case, Johnson & Johnson tried to use a legal scheme known as the Texas two-step. It is an accurate name because it would have allowed Johnson & Johnson to dance around its obligations to the consumers it had harmed. This is not a few people we are talking about; this case concerns 40,000 Americans who used Johnson & Johnson products and have been diagnosed with ovarian cancer or mesothelioma.
